Pastor's Ponderings

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ,

Every year as Reformation Sunday approaches, we return to the heart of our tradition: the call to be continually reshaped by God's living Word. This year's Gospel reading from Matthew 22 brings us directly to that center. When Jesus is asked which commandment is the greatest, he answers with words that echo across centuries of faith:

"You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind... And a second is like it: You shall love your neighbor as yourself." Mt 22:37-39

Jesus doesn't offer a complicated theological treatise. He doesn't build a fence of rules around the commandments. He simply places love—love of God and love of neighbor—at the very core of faithful living. "On these two commandments," he says, "hang all the Law and the Prophets." Everything else is suspended from this foundation.

This teaching would not have sounded strange to his listeners. In fact, it echoes a famous conversation between two revered rabbis, Hillel and Shammai. A seeker once asked Shammai to teach him the whole Torah while standing on one foot. Shammai dismissed him. But Hillel responded with a sentence that has become one of Judaism's most beloved teachings: "What is hateful to you, do not do to your neighbor. The rest is commentary—go and learn it."

Versions of this teaching appear in nearly every major religion and moral tradition. It is stitched into the fabric of human conscience. It is the compass we instinctively reach for when we want to act with integrity, compassion, and courage. And Jesus places it not as a suggestion, but as the very shape of the life God desires for us.

Reformation Sunday reminds us that the church is always being reformed—not by novelty, but by returning again and again to what matters most. In a world that often rewards outrage, division, and suspicion, Jesus calls us back to love that is wholehearted, embodied, and neighbor-shaped. Love that is willing to be the first to step toward reconciliation, generosity, and justice.

When we aren't sure which direction to go, when the noise of the world grows loud, when decisions feel heavy, this is where we begin: Does this action reflect love of God? Does it reflect love of neighbor? Does it honor the dignity I hope others would honor in me?

If the answer is yes, we are already standing on holy ground.

As we celebrate the Reformation this year, may we remember that the most radical reform Jesus ever offered was not a new doctrine, but a renewed heart. A heart aligned with love. A heart that sees God's image in every neighbor. A heart that trusts that when we start with love, we are already walking in the way of Christ.

Your sister in Christ, Pr. Karen
